NZIA RESENE
ARCHITECTURE AWARDS 2007

and the Award goes to...

The New Zealand Institute of Architects announced its 2007 Supreme, Enduring and New Zealand Awards at a Gala Dinner in Wellington. Attended by hundreds of guests, these are the most significant professional recognition that architects can receive in New Zealand.

Three NZIA Resene New Zealand Award winners were further rewarded with this year's NZIA Resene Supreme Awards. National Awards Convenor and Auckland architect Pip Cheshire said the Supreme Awards are confirmation for the winning architects that they have produced something very special. "The winning projects not only meet all the demands, qualities, and values of architecture, but they ultimately move the spirit. The architects can be proud of the fact that they've each created a piece of architecture that makes the blood pump a bit faster when you experience it."

The three 2007 Supreme Award winning projects are:

Kaitawa Rd House, Otaki
by Dave Launder Architect

Simply straddled log-like across a watercourse, the Kaitawa Rd House's extended linear form responds strongly and deliberately to the striated landscape, climate, agricultural buildings and restricted access to the river valley. Cavalier and cunning, this environmentally hardworking house challenges current construction practice as it actively participates with the elements in the rural paddock.

Waitangi Park, Wellington
a joint venture between Athfield Architects Limited and Wraight and Associates Ltd

After controversial beginnings, Waitangi Park's robust design is now an integral piece of Wellington's waterfront landscape that has been embraced by the whole city, a dense layering of rich ideas; historical, cultural, ecological, ESD features and mixed recreational spaces for a diverse range of users.

Sargent House 1973 > Dunn House 2005, Remuera, Auckland
by Fearon Hay Architects Ltd

Awe inspiring from the first, this re-invention of a Ron Sang house skilfully integrates the tectonics of the original with the intentions of a new generation. The major decisions in siting new elements serve to complete the entire scheme in a way that wasn't originally possible.

Good architectural design can also withstand the passing of time and still remain relevant to the current day. Three early 1960s residential homes in Wellington and Auckland - Toomath House (1964) by Bill Toomath, Alington House (1962) by Bill Alington and Manning House (1960) by Jack Manning received a 2007 NZIA Enduring Award for Architecture. Nearly half a century old, and flung from city hill to bush to coast respectively, these homes are still sought after for their designs incorporating the first movements towards open plan living and an emphasis on the comfort of those living within.

The suite of projects in the awards programme reflects the increasing sophistication of our architecture and our society and our growing awareness and understanding of how much a well designed building can add to our environment on both aesthetic and functional levels. Congratulations and thank you to all NZIA members who have taken part in this year's awards programme. Resene is proud to continue its support of excellence in architecture, an excellence that benefits clients, community and country.
